Good morning, [REDACTED],

During last Friday's lesson, [REDACTED] along with her group members continued to make their clay characters some of which are quite detailed in preparation for filming during today's lesson. If they can complete their filming today this will still allow them enough time to complete the task on time as they also have the double lesson on Friday to work on the task, her group is not the only group in this position.

[REDACTED] and her group can have access to the art room on Friday lunch to complete their task being mindful that they will have to share the space with Year 9 and 10 students who are also needing to complete their tasks.

Regards,

Carly

Hi Carly,

[REDACTED]'s group is still not ready to start making their Claymation which is due for submission this Friday.

[REDACTED] tells me that in last Friday's double art lesson, the other 3 girls in her group mucked around making clay figures and accessories that are not part of their Claymation project.

[REDACTED] has tried repeatedly in and outside of class to get these girls to commit to a story idea. [REDACTED] has made the set, a clay figure and written several story boards herself, but she has been unable to get the other girls to contribute to making a joint/group story board. The other girls have made a clay ball and I understand someone plans to make a clay rabbit.

[REDACTED] has said that you are allowing the class to use the art room on Wednesday lunch time to film their short. [REDACTED] rehearses with the string ensemble on Wednesday lunch times. She does not want to miss a rehearsal, especially if her group is going to continue to muck around.

What other options are available for [REDACTED]'s group to complete this project?

Kind regards,

[REDACTED]

Hi [REDACTED],

Thank you for your email. I'm so pleased to hear that [REDACTED] is enjoying Visual Art and is keen to develop her creativity and skill!

I spoke to [REDACTED] once I returned from camp regarding her assessment in class. In order for students to be most successful with this assessment, students need to work in groups. Working in groups is an essential skill that we want the students to develop, as we understand that this can sometimes be tricky managing the workload and roles of each member. The rubric on how marks will be allocated for the task can be found on SEQTA. I will monitor [REDACTED]'s group closely to ensure everyone is contributing and involved. I am concerned about the amount of hours [REDACTED] has dedicated to this outside of class, as the majority of this assessment should be completed in class. I will touch base with [REDACTED] today to ensure she feels comfortable within the group dynamic and confident moving forward with the project.

So that you are aware, the school is providing all materials for this project. Students can use the class cameras or their own phones to take the images. I will be supporting the class through each stage of the task.

Many thanks,

Carly
